

THE IRISH CHURCH SCHEME EXPLAINED.

From the Pall Mall Gazette. In spite of the remarkable clearness and completeness with which Mr. Gladstone drew out his proposals, they are, from the necessity of the case, sufficiently complicated to make it difficult to state their main features.

First, then, as to disestablishment. This will be total but not immediate. It will take effect finally on a day to be named in the act, and which it is at present proposed to fix for the 1st of January, 1871. On that day the ecclesiastical courts will be abolished, the ecclesiastical laws will cease to have any authority, the bishops will no longer Peers of Parliament, and all the ecclesiastical corporations in the country will be dissolved. During the interval between the passing of the bill and the date of disestablishment certain provisional arrangements will be in force. Vacancies in the clerical staff of the Irish Church will be filled up as they arise, but the appointments will be of a temporary nature.

Secondly, as to disendowment. Technically and legally this will be total and immediate. A commission will be appointed, the members of which will be named in the bill, and in this commission the entire property of the Irish Church will rest from the day on which the measure receives the Royal assent. When, however, the property comes to be dealt with by this commission a distinction will be made between public and private endowments. The former, including everything in the nature of a State grant or a State reserve, will be resumed by the State; the latter, which Mr. Gladstone defines as money contributed from private sources since the year 1660, will be restored to the disestablished Church. The value of the public endowments is estimated at £15,500,000, the value of the private endowments is put at £500,000.

Thirdly, what is to be done with the public endowments? First of all compensation has to be made to vested interests, including those connected with Maynooth College and the various companies, the payment of which is the subject of the regnum donum. Among vested interests, of course, the largest is that of incumbents. The amount of income to which each is entitled, deducting what he may have paid for curacies, will be ascertained by him during his curacy, and he will be allowed to continue to discharge the duties of his benefice. Under certain circumstances, this interest may upon his own application be commuted for a life annuity. As regards his right of patronage, the payment of the regnum donum will be made to him in the form of a lump sum. The title rent charge, however, will vest in the commissioners, at once and without any life interest, being intended; the fact of Parliament being pledged to the payment of the regnum donum, the title rent charge, however, will vest in the commissioners, at once and without any life interest, being intended; the fact of Parliament being pledged to the payment of the regnum donum, the title rent charge, however, will vest in the commissioners, at once and without any life interest, being intended.

Next will come by compensation the largest part of which will be absorbed by parish clerics and sextons. These payments, together with those due to the Presbyterian community and Maynooth College, and one or two smaller items, will constitute the balance of the regnum donum, to about £2,000,000. In this way about £7,500,000 will be left at the disposal of Parliament. This will be appropriated "mainly to the relief of unavoidable calamity and suffering," but at the same time the will of Parliament will not interfere with the obligation imposed upon property by the poor law. There is a particular class of "unavoidable calamity and suffering," which in Ireland is relieved not out of the poor rate, but out of the county cess, and a tax paid by the occupier alone, and levied upon tenements of even the lowest rental. In this class are comprised lunatics and idiots, and persons who are deaf, dumb, or blind. Of these 231,000 are estimated to be the annual value of the endowments at the disposal of Parliament, £235,000 will be devoted to the relief of these forms of suffering. The remainder will be appropriated to county infirmaries, reformatories, and the provision of skilled labor for the poor. With the affairs of the Established Church have been wound up, the commissioners will report to the Queen that the objects immediately contemplated by the act have all been provided for, and that such a surplus is available for these ulterior charitable purposes.

Fourthly, as to private endowments. These are to be handed over to the disestablished Church, and the question at once arises who is to take them. Mr. Gladstone proposes to leave the answer to be found by the Church itself. In order to enable it to do one, all those legal disabilities under which it now labors in regard to synodical meetings will be at once removed. It is proposed to pay to the Church as soon as this is done the bishops, clergy, and laity will proceed to constitute for themselves something in the nature of a governing body, and power will be given to the Queen in Council "not to create such a body, but to recognize it when created." This recognition will be made to depend on one condition only—that the governing body shall fairly represent the bishops, clergy, and laity of the disestablished Church. So long as this condition is fulfilled the Queen will not concern herself with the question whether the governing body is well or ill devised, it must honestly represent the Irish Episcopalians, and that is all. This governing body will be empowered to negotiate with the Commission, and for the future management of the affairs of the religious community of which it is the representative. In this last respect it will be left absolutely free; but until the ecclesiastical law has been repealed it will be altered by the voluntary act of the governing body which will be held to be binding on clergy and laity. In this way the members of the disestablished Church will be treated in the same manner as to doctrine and discipline which they have hitherto lived under. If these are altered in any way, it must be by their own choice, expressed through a representative organization which remains a class of property not belonging, strictly speaking, to either private or public endowments. This consists of the churches and the glebe houses. They are not private endowments, because they have not been built, or been contributed from private sources. They are not public endowments, because they are not State reserves, except to their present possessors. It is proposed, therefore, to hand over to the churches to the governing body of the disestablished Church on the simple condition of that body that it intends to maintain them for the public worship or to take them down with a view of building others in their stead. In the case of churches not accepted by the governing body, the Commission will be empowered to dispose of the site and the building materials. Twelve churches which partake of the character of national monuments will be partially maintained by the Commission. Rained churches, however, the Board of Works, together with the endowment funds to admit of their preservation. The amount upon which the globe
